JAN SZCZEPANIK WITH SOME OF THE WORK OF HIS CAMERA.

In securing patents on his inventions.

Then this raw boy, harely 30 years old, built eight different machines for photographic weaving, and each of them failed as soon as it was finished, until Herr Kielnberg's money had all been dissipated and his friends rold him that he was mad in thus backing a hairbrained inventor. Indeed, the director of the weaving school at Aachen laughed at the lifea of a photographic weaver when it was finst presented to him.

Yet young Jan never for a moment wavered nor lost confidence, and finally he persuaded a second capitalist to livest money, and the ninth machine which he built was a notable success. It would do the work of 169 weavers, and do it with more certainty and accuracy.

Jan Szczepanik, Dreamer as a Boy,
Accomplishes a Marvelous Success As An Inventor.

(Special Correspondence)

Vienna, Austria, Nov. 29.—A poor Polich schoolmaster has built a camera that runs on a railroad trick, the largest photographic camera in the world, and in accomplishing this feat he has competely revolutionized the weaving of the rure fabrics for which Poland is so famous. The inventor's name is Jan Sczepanik, which is pronounced Shtepenik. He has already made himself famous by the invention of the distributed the meney in small loans among the poor of Szczepanik's own native village, asking no security, quite content to help those who needed money more than she. The people who had known Jan as a boy formed quite a different opinion of him as a man. Sczepanik, which is pronounced Shtepenik. He has already made himself famous by the invention of the distributed the meney in small in gold, the first thing he did was to send every penny of it to his aunt in the old town of Krosna, and that good woman, although she was poor herself, promptly distributed the meney in small loans among the poor of Szczepanik's own native village, asking no security, quite content to help those who needed money more than she. The people who had known Jan as a boy formed quite a different opinion of him as a man. Sczepanik, which is pronounced Shtepenik. He has already made himself famous by the invention of the dis-
